Coordination

GBV AoR update note:

‘Women and girls continue to face severely heightened risks under the current conditions. Forced displacement, the division of families, accommodation in temporary or shared shelters, increased military presence and the establishment of checkpoints all heighten risks of Gender-Based Violence (GBV), which comes on top of an already high pre-existing prevalence in the country. GBV actors are receiving reports of sexual harassment and violence during displacement. Women and girls travelling alone are at increased risk of sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Difficulties in accessing basic goods and services, and lack of access to safe shelter, render women and girls extremely vulnerable to sexual exploitation and abuse. Direct humanitarian assistance is essential to meet the immediate needs of women and girls and reduces the risk of GBV. Risk mitigation of GBV must also be integrated as a priority across the humanitarian response.

GBV actors on the ground report that although specialized services - including GBV hotlines - remain partially functional, access is extremely difficult for both staff and survivors due to ongoing conflict and movement restrictions, including the blockage of some passages by Improvised Explosive Devices (IEDs).

Service mapping is being updated and new referral pathways will be developed for key locations where the humanitarian response was not previously operational, in particular areas with a sharp increase in the displacement of women and girls.’ [GBV AoR update released on 11 March 2022].
